Unit description

Marketing technologies driven by artificial intelligence and automation are now dominating the business world, with digitalisation being one of the key factors in driving business success. As organisations continue to face challenges in the pursuit of competitive advantages, new technologies and perspectives have emerged that allow marketers to better create brand and user experiences across digital touchpoints. Building on the traditional role of marketing in creating and enhancing customer value, this unit develops students' knowledge of various technologies that facilitate personalisation, optimisation, and experiential marketing. This unit focuses on bridging the gaps between marketing and technology, strengthening students' abilities in understanding relevant and sustainable marketing technology strategies, and helping students to develop a digital mindset.
