Unit description

In a fast-moving digital world organisational strategy and design is central to build and mobilise change capability. Designing organisations to meet ever-changing customer needs and harness rapidly developing new technologies is a critical leadership responsibility. Organisations reliant on hierarchical structures and decision-making to develop and implement strategy are often too slow for the innovation and agility required in a digital world. In contrast, organisations designed for a digital world are able to deliver innovative customer experiences by leveraging people, processes, data and technology to unlock new enterprise-wide capabilities. Understanding how to effectively design businesses for sustained success requires a focus on operational design and new ways of working.

In this unit we will examine five building blocks that contribute to business success for digital: operational backbone, digital platform, shared customer insights, accountability framework, and an external developer platform. We will examine what it takes to design, build and implement these building blocks and how they work together to transform organisations to deliver new customer and employee experiences.
