Unit description

The core unit in the Master of Research specialisation in anthropology provides a grounding in theoretical, methodological and interpretive issues that are currently being debated by anthropologists. These issues will vary from year to year according to contemporary developments in anthropology and the interests of the course convenor. Others may be more enduring, such as the theoretical issues related to kinship, to politics and power and the relation between individual and society, the “writing culture” debate, “Orientalism” and the problem of the “other,” and cultural relativism.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

The course will give a grasp of some advanced theoretical frameworks with anthropology and from political philosophy.

The ethnographic component of the course will train in linking abstract and concrete levels of understanding

The topic of agency is central to understanding not only a discipline but the broad aim of understanding human experience

The course trains graduate students in connecting the specifics of anthropological thinking with issues that have shaped most of the humanities in the last thirty years.
