Unit description

This unit is a study of the history of Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries BCE, from the establishment of the Roman republic to the time of the first Punic War. The work draws on Livy, other literary sources including Plutarch, and to some degree the findings of archaeological research.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

Demonstrate understanding and retention of information from primary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries BC.

Demonstrate ability to interpret primary literary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries, studied in English translation.

Demonstrate ability to understand and interpret published archaeological data relating to Rome and Italy in the fifth and fourth centuries.

Demonstrate critical understanding and evaluation of modern academic studies of early Roman history, in English.

Write analytical and argumentative studies relating to important questions in Roman history.

Present written work to a high standard, with relevant footnoting and accurate bibliographies.

General Assessment Information

Essays should be submitted through turnitin, via the links in the iLearn page.

Assessment Tasks

Name	Weighting	Due
Minor essay	20%	15 August 2016
Major essay	30%	21 October 2016
End of session examination	50%	As scheduled

Minor essay

Due: 15 August 2016

Weighting: 20%

Answer this question in a brief essay (i.e. shorter than 1000 words, counting footnotes but not counting bibliography):

How valuable (or otherwise) is Livy's account of the Kaeso Quinctius riots in 463 (Livy 3.11-14) as evidence for the history of Rome in the early republican period?

This brief essay is set for completion at the beginning of Week 3 of the semester, to help students get an idea of the standard for the unit, and how they are going. Bibliographical suggestions should be drawn from the bibliographies for Weeks 1 and 2. Students should also find relevant ancient sources, and scholarly books and articles, for themselves, since a valuable research skill is developed by doing this.

DO NOT use internet sources of low quality (for example, most of those without a named author would count as being of low quality). The minor essay will be marked and returned as soon as possible. There will be no choice of topic for this essay, in view of how limited the range of work is which has been covered by this stage in the unit.

The Ancient History Department style guide should be followed for all the essays in this unit.

On successful completion you will be able to:

- Demonstrate understanding and retention of information from primary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries BC.
- Demonstrate ability to interpret primary literary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries, studied in English translation.

- Demonstrate ability to understand and interpret published archaeological data relating to Rome and Italy in the fifth and fourth centuries.
- Demonstrate critical understanding and evaluation of modern academic studies of early Roman history, in English.
- Write analytical and argumentative studies relating to important questions in Roman history.
- Present written work to a high standard, with relevant footnoting and accurate bibliographies.

Major essay

Due: 21 October 2016

Weighting: 30%

The major essay should have a maximum length of 2000 words counting footnotes but not counting bibliography.

A greater depth of study and a fuller range of reading are expected in the case of the major essay.

Initial bibliographical suggestions should be drawn from bibliographies in the iLearn unit. Students should also find relevant ancient sources, and scholarly books and articles, for themselves, since a valuable research skill is developed by doing this.

DO NOT use internet sources of low quality (for example, most of those without a named author would count as being of low quality).

Major essay titles:

1. Dionysius of Halicarnassus said that 'History is philosophy learned from examples'. Compare the lessons Dionysius wished to teach in Books 10 and 11 of his Roman Antiquities with the lessons Niccolo Macchiavelli wished to teach in his Discourses on the first Decade of Livy.
2. 'The Vestals', writes Inge Kroppenber, 'represented the living Roman Republic. Their inauguration into the cult of Vesta, the captio, was a mythical and ritual process, both violent and sovereign, allowing the res publica to experience an immaculate new beginning.'
- In view of the pre-republican origin of the Vestal Virgins, can Kroppenber's view be convincingly maintained?
3. 'Very little in the sources ... prepares us for the universal belief among early modern historians that the gens was of surpassing influence in the creation of the early state, and the organisation of its early civic life' (C.J. Smith). Was the gens as such ever a key to political power at Rome? If not, how did the gens relate to real loci of power?
4. '[The] plebeian model of political performativity ... is already implied by the institutions of ancient Rome's plebeian democracy as well as certain other premodern republics grounded on differentiated citizenship (whereby the few, though elevated and distinguished from the many, nonetheless endured unique burdens as a condition of this elevation) ...' (J.E. Green)

How powerful is the comparison Green draws between plebeian politics in the Roman republic and the 'plebeianism' which Green defines in the course of arguing that 'something other than the full realization of free and equal citizenship is being practised in contemporary mass liberal–democratic regimes'?

5. 'We must ... turn to Livy and ... try to assess the extent to which the Pontifical Tables and ... other sources ... channelled reliable information into the annalistic tradition. This procedure relies almost entirely on assessing the inherent probability of L.'s evidence and working from there to assessments of the quality of his ultimate sources' (S.P. Oakley).

Is it possible to do actual history under these conditions, or only myth? Focus on one or two historical issues of your choice from Livy 6-10.

6. Outline the types of Roman citizenship and the variety of kinds of citizen communities which existed between 386 and 264. How did modifications in the nature of citizenship, and creation of new citizen and non-citizen communities in the Roman sphere, augment the power of Rome in these years? Give examples.

The Ancient History Department style guide should be followed for all the essays in this unit.

On successful completion you will be able to:

- Demonstrate understanding and retention of information from primary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries BC.
- Demonstrate ability to interpret primary literary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries, studied in English translation.
- Demonstrate ability to understand and interpret published archaeological data relating to Rome and Italy in the fifth and fourth centuries.
- Demonstrate critical understanding and evaluation of modern academic studies of early Roman history, in English.
- Write analytical and argumentative studies relating to important questions in Roman history.
- Present written work to a high standard, with relevant footnoting and accurate bibliographies.

End of session examination

Due: As scheduled

Weighting: 50%

There will be a two-hour exam at the end of semester. There will be a choice of questions, and students, may choose to answer either two or three.

On successful completion you will be able to:

- Demonstrate understanding and retention of information from primary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries BC.
- Demonstrate ability to interpret primary literary sources relating to Rome in the fifth and fourth centuries, studied in English translation.
- Demonstrate ability to understand and interpret published archaeological data relating to Rome and Italy in the fifth and fourth centuries.
- Demonstrate critical understanding and evaluation of modern academic studies of early Roman history, in English.

Delivery and Resources

Lectures will be recorded and available via Echo 360.

Resources are available in iLearn.

There are items available for this unit in e-reserve.

There are no tutorials. Attendance at lectures is recommended.

PC and Internet access are required. Basic computer skills (e.g., internet browsing) and skills in word processing are also a requirement. Any problem, contact onehelp@mq.edu.au (9850 4357) and not the course convener.
