Unit description

This unit examines the compatibility of gendered political institutions with a contemporary society that embraces modern ideals of equality, liberty, anti-discrimination and individual choice. Students will theorise and analyse the structural processes that position gendered individuals in unequal relations of power. They will analyse how gendered institutions and systems work in practice; the role of the state in sustaining them; the claims of those who contest these normative institutions; and gender's specific products and effects, such as women's lower wages; the exclusion of homosexuality from normative public life; sex segregation in employment; and heterosexual male dominance in political life.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

Understand and apply the main conceptual, theoretical and analytical repertoire developed and used by scholars of gender and politics.

Identify and explain the ideological approaches informing evolving understandings of gender and policy (eg feminism, conservatism, neoliberalism etc)

Assess the significance of gendered assumptions in select policies governing the intimate arena (eg sex roles, heteronormativity, hegemonic masculinity) and their relationships to pronatalist government agendas.

Identify the evolution of critical thinking about gendered policies more broadly, especially the transition from gender specific programming, to gender mainstreamed programming including approaches of intersectionality.

Critically evaluate Australian Gender Mainstreaming policy approaches in an international (global) context.

Analyse and evaluate how, in practice, gendered assumptions in policy relate to contemporary political ideals such as antidiscrimination, equality, liberty and individual choice.

General Assessment Information

A detailed Assessment Guidelines pdf explaining the requirements for each assignment will be available on the POL826 iLearn page in the Assessment Resources section. It is necessary to have read these guidelines in order to successfully complete each task.

All written work is to be submitted electronically through Turnitin on the POL826 iLearn page.

In the event of ill health or misadventure please contact the convenor to discuss an extension. Approved extensions will not incur a late penalty. Disruption to Studies requests will require appropriate supporting documentation.

Assignments that are submitted after the due date and without an approved extension will incur a 3% penalty each day they are late. Any paper submitted more than 3 weeks after the due date will not be marked and the student will be failed for that assignment.

Unit Description

Gender is central to politics. Gender informs our identities, social norms, behaviours, stereotypes and expectations for men and women. Studying gender and policy means analysing how gendered institutions and systems work in practice, the role of the state in sustaining them, the claims of those who contest these normative institutions, as well as gender's specific products and effects, such as women's lower wages, the exclusion of homosexuality from normative public life, sex segregation in employment and heterosexual male dominance in political life. It entails theorising and analysing the structural processes that position individuals in unequal relations of power. In Gender and Policy we will examine the compatibility of gendered institutions with a postmodern society. That is, a society embracing modern political ideals of equality, liberty, antidiscrimination and individual choice; along with the social organisation of sex, sexuality and kinship that has transcended its traditional proprietorial origins
