Unit description

As Australia progresses through the second decade of the 21st century, it confronts a number of persistent questions: Has it lived up to its reputation as an egalitarian country whose unofficial motto is 'fair go!?' How have class relations been impacted on – if at all – by the economic boom of the past two decades? Are Australian women and men really equal in the context of the rise and fall of the Women's Liberation Movement and the emergence of so-called 'raunch feminism'? What are the prospects for closing the gap between the country's indigenous people and its more recent arrivals? Taking as its central themes, race, nation, class and gender, the unit is structured in the following way: weeks 2-4 deal with race and nation; weeks 5-8 with class politics; weeks 9-12 with gender and sexuality; week 13 concludes the unit by examining the health of the Australian body politic in light of the foregoing discussions about its divided state. All enrolment queries should be directed to Open Universities Australia (OUA): see www.open.edu.au

First Essay

Due: Week 6, Sunday, 11.59pm

Weighting: 30%

This essay, approximately 1200 words in length, deals with one of the 'important questions' listed below. You should refer to a minimum of 6 sources in answering your chosen question. In writing your essay, you should follow largely the same format as that for the major essay, including for referencing.

1. How is power exercised and distributed in Australia?
2. How deep are some of the divisions in Australian society? Are they getting worse, or better?
3. What role does the state play in fostering – or lessening – some of these antagonisms?
4. Is Australian egalitarianism a myth?
5. What impact has the economic growth of the last two decades in Australia had on class division?
6. Can conflicts in Australia be resolved through parliamentary reform?

On successful completion you will be able to:

- 1. A sound understanding of the foundations of the Australian political system and the major contemporary issues within Australia's socio-political framework.
- 2. A working knowledge of the agenda's and policies of Australia's political parties and the debates and controversies that surround them
- 4. Development of a sophisticated analytical vocabulary for better appreciating some of the more pressing contemporary issues in Australian politics

Second Essay

Due: Week 12, Sunday, 11.59pm

Weighting: 45%

The essay, approximately 2500 words in length, provides students with the opportunity to explore a topic of interest in depth.

Choose one of the following questions for your major essay. 1. What is behind some of the racist attacks on Indigenous sporting stars? 2. 'Australia is not the land of the "fair go"!' Discuss in relation to Australia's response to asylum-seekers? 3. 'Class divisions in Australia make a mockery of rhetoric extolling the "national interest".' Discuss. 4. Is feminism relevant in 21st century Australia? 5. Would same-sex marriage liberate lesbians and gays? 6. What can the Australian government do, if anything, about the depression epidemic?

7. What explains tPauline Hanson's return as a political force?

8. Are Australian's 'fed up' with the two major political parties?

More information about the essay will be available on iLearn, and it will be further discussed in class in coming weeks

A high standard essay would draw upon a wide range of resources to support a well-organized argument in response to the set question. Remember, there is no 'correct' answer to each question: rather, there are arguments that are better expressed, more persuasively made, intelligently constructed, supported with evidence, and deeply analysed. Consider whether the arguments you read are logical and provide convincing evidence. The same criteria should apply to your own work.

General Guidelines

1. Rely primarily on scholarly references (all JSTOR sources count as scholarly). 10-15 sources are usually required for a sophisticated critical essay. 2. Avoid suspect websites like blogs. Newspapers are fine to use, but they are not scholarly. Research essays from think-tanks are scholarly. 3. Be sure that the essay is your own point of view based on your own reading 4. Both Harvard (in-text) and Chicago (footnotes) systems of referencing are acceptable. No endnotes. 5. You may go 10% under or over the word limit.

On successful completion you will be able to:

- 1. A sound understanding of the foundations of the Australian political system and the major contemporary issues within Australia's socio-political framework.
- 2. A working knowledge of the agenda's and policies of Australia's political parties and the debates and controversies that surround them
- 3. Familiarity with the main political ideologies that are influential in the Australian political scene
- 4. Development of a sophisticated analytical vocabulary for better appreciating some of the more pressing contemporary issues in Australian politics

Reading Review

Due: Multiple

Weighting: 10%

Students are asked to choose one week, and then select one reading (book, chapter from an edited book collection, or journal article) that is relevant to the week in question. You are required to post a response to the reading on the Discussion Forum for that week. Your response, which should be between 400-600 words in length, should include a short summary of the reading's argument and a critical response to this argument. Other students may respond to your post during discussion. This is your chance to do some further research on a topic that you are interested in. You may include reference to the source you chose in either of your essays.

On successful completion you will be able to:

- 1. A sound understanding of the foundations of the Australian political system and the major contemporary issues within Australia's socio-political framework.
- 2. A working knowledge of the agenda's and policies of Australia's political parties and the debates and controversies that surround them
- 3. Familiarity with the main political ideologies that are influential in the Australian political scene
- 4. Development of a sophisticated analytical vocabulary for better appreciating some of the more pressing contemporary issues in Australian politics

Participation

Due: Ongoing

Weighting: 15%

You will be assessed on your participation in online discussion undertaken through the unit website. This task develops your ability to communicate ideas, your appreciation and comprehension of the themes and concepts discussed in the course, your ability to critically assess and evaluate the arguments of others, and your ability to clearly articulate your thoughts. It is also a task that monitors your progress across the unit topics. You are expected to do the weekly readings, participate in weekly discussions and make postings within the time frame of each discussion topic. These begin on Monday of the discussion week and run through to the following Sunday. You should look to answer at least one of the set questions each week, as well as engaging with the posts of other students. Each individual post should be kept to a maximum of 100 words. A professional and courteous approach towards staff and fellow students is expected at all times

On successful completion you will be able to:

- 1. A sound understanding of the foundations of the Australian political system and the major contemporary issues within Australia's socio-political framework.
- 2. A working knowledge of the agenda's and policies of Australia's political parties and the debates and controversies that surround them
- 3. Familiarity with the main political ideologies that are influential in the Australian political scene
- 4. Development of a sophisticated analytical vocabulary for better appreciating some of the more pressing contemporary issues in Australian politics

Delivery and Resources

As Australia progresses through the second decade of the 21st century, it confronts a number of persistent questions: Has it lived up to its reputation as an egalitarian country whose unofficial motto is 'fair go!?'? How have class relations been impacted on – if at all – by the economic boom of the past two decades? Are Australian women and men really equal in the context of the rise and fall of the Women's Liberation Movement and the emergence of so-called 'raunch feminism'? In what way has its capitalist ancestry as a British colony left a legacy in Australia's politics and society – for, example, the White Australia policy? What are the prospects for closing the gap between the country's indigenous people and its more recent arrivals?

In spite of the power and reach of what has come to be known as globalisation, every polity remains different. Australia is no exception – it has its own political nuances and idiosyncrasies that make it both interesting and worth of study in its own right. Anyone who lives, works or studies in Australia needs a thorough grasp of its politics. This course delves far below the surface of politics portrayed by the mass media, which – to the extent that it's interested in politics at all – remains obsessed with personalities, scandal, and leaders of institutions, whose existence and rationale are always accepted uncritically. In contrast, this course takes nothing for granted, and, following the cry of the philosopher Frederic Jameson to 'historicise everything', we view all aspects of Australian society from a critical and historical perspective.

Taking as its central themes, race, nation, class, and gender, the course is structured in the following way: Weeks 2-4 deal with race and nation; Weeks 5-8 with class politics; Weeks 9-12 with gender and sexuality; Week 13 concludes the course by examining the health of the Australian body politic in light of the foregoing discussions about its divided state.

Primary readings will be provided each week on ilearn, a suggested reading list for each week will also be available via a pdf. Your tutor may also introduce contemporary sources relevant to each weeks topic.
