Unit description

This unit is concerned with the study of language and language learning from a social perspective. It provides a historical perspective on the development of social understandings of language, and on the social/cognitivist divide in linguistics in the mid-twentieth century. Language and language learning are studied as collective, interpersonal processes, and the role of the brain in these social processes is also considered. The nature of 'community' is examined from anthropological and sociological perspectives, and the relations between language, learning, and community are explored.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

ULO1: apply knowledge of the historical development of social theories of language and language learning to an understanding of the nature of language learning and development

ULO2: apply knowledge of social perspectives on language use to individual and group development of language on different timescales

ULO3: explain how individual-group relations are linguistically constructed and mediated, with reference to individual identity, communities, and language use

ULO4: evaluate the implications of the social aspects of language learning for language policy at institutional, local, and/or national levels

ULO5: explain the role of a range of factors in the development of language in the individual, including relations between biological (the human body and brain) and social (family and group) factors
