Unit description

This unit explores the historical shift from modernity to post-modernity underway since the late twentieth century, tracing: the history of the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989, and the emergence of the neo-liberal culture of enterprise that has characterised the global economy since the 1990s; the tension between notions of progress and their environmental consequences; and the nature of war and terror in the post-modern world. The unit also considers how post-modernity manifests in culture and the historical context of these cultural expressions. Post-modernism is explored as a manifestation of the historical shift to post-modernity, and the unit considers a range of post-modernist historical texts, and texts which challenge these interpretations.

David Harvey, The Condition of Postmodernity, ch.2; Philipp Blom, The Vertigo Years, 'Ritual, Myths and Masks', pp.286-89; Richard Stites, Revolutionary Dreams, 'War Communism as Utopia' pp.46-52; Colin Marshall, 'Pruitt-Igoe: the troubled high-rise that came to define urban America', Guardian, 22 April 2015.

Seminar discussion questions: How does Harvey characterise the project of modernity? Why is Stravinsky's Rite of Spring 'barbaric'? How did Bolshevik 'War Communism' reflect the modern project? Does the demolition of the Pruitt-Igoe complex represent the moment 'modern architecture died'?

Week Four (16 March)

Topic 3: Pomophobia? The Critics of Postmodern Interpretation

Beverley Southgate, Postmodernism in History: Fear or Freedom? ch.1; Willie Thompson, Postmodernism and History, ch.1; Richard J. Evans In Defence of History, Introduction; Review of In Defence of History by Professor Antony Easthope, Manchester Metropolitan University, Textual Practice, vol.12, no. 3 (Winter 1998).

Seminar discussion questions: How does Southgate suggest that historians can overcome 'pomophobia'? Is Thompson right to argue that postmodernism 'has nothing to offer historians'? Why did Evans argue that postmodernism generated a 'crisis' for historians? Why does Easthope assert that 'Richard J. Evans did not really write In Defence of History'?

Week Five (23 March)

Topic 4: Fearless Speech: Michel Foucault's History of the Present

Edward Said review of Power, New York Times, 17 December 2000; Michel Foucault, 'Lives of Infamous Men', in M. Foucault, Power, Essential Works Vol.3; Clare O'Farrell, Michel Foucault, ch.5; J. G. Merquior, Foucault, ch.10.

Seminar discussion questions: Why does Said argue that Foucault leaves no reader unchanged? What does Foucault suggest that we can learn from the 'dark legends' of the lives of infamous men? How does O'Farrell suggest historians can benefit from Foucault's methods? Why does Merquior suggest she's wasting her time?

Alun Munslow, Narrative and History ch.1; Patrick Joyce, Democratic Subjects, ch.12, 'Narrative and History'; Judith Walkowitz, City of Dreadful Delight, Introduction.

Seminar discussion questions: Why does Munslow argue that reality and representation work together in the historians' construction of the past? Why does Joyce argue that the focus on narrative has destabilised the study of history? How does Walkowitz argue that poststructuralism has effected the historical interpretations of power and gender?

Week Seven (6 April)

Topic 6: Progress and Nature

Zygmunt Bauman, Modernity and Ambivalence, ch.1 pp.26-42, 'The scandal of ambivalence'; David Blackbourn, The Conquest of Nature, 'Introduction', pp.3-12; 'Attacks paid for by big business are driving science into a dark era', The Observer, 19 February 2012; 'Rachel Carson and the legacy of Silent Spring', The Observer, 27 May 2012.

Seminar discussion questions: Why in modernity did nature stand for 'the other of humanity', as Zygmunt Bauman argues? Why does Blackbourn claim that writing about the shaping of the German landscape is to write about how modern Germany was shaped? Has resistance to climate change undermined Rachel Carson's legacy?

Week Eight (27 April)

Topic 7: Postmodern War

Eric Hobsbawm, 'Barbarism: A User's Guide', in On History; Red Cross Survey; Christopher Coker, War in an Age of Risk, review by Claudia Aradau, Ethics & International Affairs, Volume 24.1 (Spring 2010), Carnegie Council; David Chandler, 'Risk and the biopolitics of global insecurity', Conflict, Security & Development, Volume 10, Issue 2, 2010; Tim Weiner, 'Lockheed and the Future of Warfare', New York Times, 28 November 2004.

Seminar discussion questions: Why are 'risk' and 'barbarism' the paradigms of postmodern warfare? Can Lockheed help lift 'the fog of war' and reduce risk?

Week Nine (4 May)

Topic 8: Postmodern Terror

Christopher Coker, '9/11: The Glass Shatters', in Eamonn McCabe, Decade, Phaidon, 2001; Muqtedar Khan, 'Islam, Postmodernity and Freedom: Answers to Questions posed by Discourse Magazine' October 2002; Osama bin Laden, 'Letter to America', [extract] Observer.co.uk, Sunday 24 November 2002; Pankaj Mishra, 'How to think about Islamic State', Guardian, 24 July 2015.

Seminar discussion questions: How has the nature of political terror changed in the late twentieth century? Have western nations developed effective strategies to counter it? Is Khan right to argue that terrorism is 'the most spectacular postmodern manifestation'? Why does Mishra describe Islamic State as a 'postmodern collage'?

Week Ten (11 May)

Topic 9: The Enterprising Citizen: Neo-Liberalism

Seminar discussion questions: Why does Jameson argue that postmodern culture reflects the logic of late capitalism? Has the 'real' been displaced by digital technology in postmodern culture? How do works such as Crash, 'Fitter Happier' and Blade Runner reflect a response to postmodernity?

Week Twelve (25 May)

Topic 11: Opening the Wall: Postmodern Reflections on Modernity

Timothy Snyder, 'Hitler's world may not be so far away', Guardian, 16 September 2015; Václav Havel, "The End of the Modern Era", Speech to the World Economic Forum, Davos, Switzerland, 4 February 1992; Robert MacFarlane, 'Generation Anthropocene', Guardian, 1 April 2016;

Tzvetan Todorov, Hope and Memory, 'Epilogue'.

Seminar discussion questions: What lessons does Snyder suggest should be drawn from the history of twentieth century totalitarianism? Why does Havel argue that we must face the future with 'a new, post-modern face'? Can the project of modernity adapt to the Anthropocene? How does Todorov suggest that we should take the history of the twentieth century into the twenty-first?
