Unit description

Europe is the birthplace of cinema, and film and television now more than ever are central to how European cultural identities are created and represented. Focusing on the themes of memory and migration, this unit invites students to explore cinematic narratives and techniques, engaging with social, political and cultural change in films from a number of European countries as well as transnational productions. Through a range of activities, students will be encouraged to explore fresh and multifaceted perspectives on telling stories of past and present societies through film. The unit will be delivered in English.
