Unit description

This unit examines how the concepts of equality and non-discrimination have been given effect to in Australia through the statutory framework of federal, state and territory anti-discrimination laws. It analyses the theoretical and practical application of this regulatory framework, and its shortcomings. The unit critiques how the legal form of 'discrimination' is constructed, and whether the complaints based model for the enforcement of Australian anti-discrimination laws is an effective compliance regime. It also considers how we judge the contribution law can make to eliminating discrimination and addressing inequality, and what additional regulatory responses may be required.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

ULO1: evaluate theoretical approaches to equality and discrimination

ULO2: apply the legislative proscription of discrimination to varying attributes and contexts

ULO3: analyse the applicable dispute resolution processes

ULO4: present well-developed arguments in response to a range of discrimination issues

ULO5: identify potential reforms to the existing anti-discrimination regulatory framework

Assessment Tasks
