Unit description

Political revolutions have shaped the modern world. While there is broad agreement on this claim, scholars are divided on the causes, consequences, and lasting legacies of the major historical revolutions. This unit will examine political revolutions from the seventeenth century to the present, including the English, American, French, Russian, Chinese, and Iranian revolutions. It will consider the competing economic, technological and ideological explanations of these revolutions as well as those emphasising the role of key leaders, parties and political movements. Classic theorists of revolution such as Marx, Tocqueville, Lenin and Arendt will be examined alongside a rich body of current scholarship. On completion of the unit students will gain a deeper understanding of comparative political history, as well as an appreciation of the ongoing legacy of revolution for contemporary global and domestic politics.

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

ULO1: Differentiate between the types of revolution that have occurred through history in different parts of the world

ULO2: Identify the major theories of revolution and assess their strengths and weaknesses

ULO3: Understand some of the key explanatory factors in accounting for political revolutions, including questions of agency, organisation, structural change, and ideology

ULO4: Identify the ongoing legacies of major revolutions for contemporary politics.
