Unit description

Marine ecosystems play a crucial role in global health and functioning, and consist of a complex and dynamic interplay of biological, chemical and physical processes. Once thought to be relative stable in the face of adversity, we now know that most marine systems are fragile and easily disturbed. In this unit we explore how such habitats can be conserved in the face of adversities such as human exploitation, habitat modification and climate change. BIOL8930 takes a problem-solving approach to gain an advanced understanding of such issues. Students have first-hand experience in designing and carrying out a research project, which is written in journal format with the ultimate aim of producing a document of publishable quality. Students will also receive advanced skills for presenting key concepts in marine conservation and management via novel assessment items such as giving a short presentation, producing an elevator pitch, assessing management options and writing a 100-word summary. BIOL8930 enhances ecological and marine biological knowledge and skills for students intending to continue with higher degree research or seeking employment in management and conservation careers. This unit involves a compulsory fieldtrip to Heron Island, Great Barrier Reef, in mid-semester break, Session 1 (separate excursion fee applies).

Important Academic Dates

Information about important academic dates including deadlines for withdrawing from units are available at <https://www.mq.edu.au/study/calendar-of-dates>

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

ULO1: Articulate why marine conservation and management is necessary from a local to global perspective

ULO2: Conceptualise the conflicts between marine conservation, the management of marine resources, and the role of the general community in the process

ULO3: Explain the key processes influencing reef structures, organisms and ecosystems

ULO4: Safely and competently collect marine research data in the field using appropriate methods and teamwork skills

ULO5: Communicate topics of interest in marine conservation and management to academic and non-academic audiences

ULO6: Design and implement a scientific project, analyse and evaluate the results in the context of relevant scientific literature, and produce a document of publishable standard

Assessment Tasks

Coronavirus (COVID-19) Update

Assessment details are no longer provided here as a result of changes due to the Coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic.

Students should consult iLearn for revised unit information.
