Unit description
This unit examines international aid to developing countries. Through close examination of historical and anthropological accounts, as well as particular case studies, students will come to understand donor-driven development as both a way of thinking and a set of practices that affect recipient populations in profound ways. To understand how international aid has emerged as a key means of closing the gap between rich and poor in the contemporary world, the unit will focus on four key topics. Specifically, we will explore the history of global poverty and economic inequality, the emergence of human rights as a key vocabulary for staking claims to economic improvement, and the complexity of the relationship between culture and development, examining in some detail the ways in which culture can both impede and aid development projects. Finally, we will pay critical attention to why programs designed to help people in the developing world have sometimes fallen short of their goals.

Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this unit, you will be able to:

ULO1: Demonstrate an understanding of why international aid remains such a contested arena within international relations and such a problematic context for altruistic notions of help.

ULO2: Read widely and actively participate in discussions concerning interactions between development agencies and target communities within the developing world and thereby gain a detailed picture of what international aid entails.

ULO3: Think critically and reflexively about recent debates informing development, the motivations behind international aid, what makes development assistance successful in improving lives and/or why there are often difficulties in achieving this.

ULO4: Examine the social outcomes that emerge from programs of international aid by looking beyond the rhetoric and developing an appreciation of the complex factors that influence these outcomes.

ULO5: Demonstrate command of anthropological knowledge and theories relevant to international aid.
