Delivery and Resources

This unit is a 'shell' unit, which means that you take lectures/tutorials/seminars from another teaching unit in order to pass this one. You may choose any one of the AHIS ancient languages undergraduate language units for your content. The History and Archaeology Department offers units in following languages: Latin, Ancient Greek, Ancient Hebrew, Hieroglyphic Egyptian, and Coptic Egyptian.

Your choice of language is restricted by the availability of that option in the session in which you take this unit.

You choose level A language if you have not previously undertaken any study in that language. If you have already undertaken some study in that language, you should contact the course-convenor of the language unit of your choice to determine what level would be the most suitable for you, taking into account your existing knowledge of the language. You can contact me to get the name of the unit convenor or for any other advice about your choice. A list of units is accessible through this link:
