Unit description
This unit introduces quantitative methods used throughout business, economics, and finance. Emphasis is placed on developing skills to analyse real-world problems, using logical thinking and mathematical techniques. The techniques covered may include functions, simultaneous equations, financial mathematics, calculus and probability. The problems studied can include pricing decisions, optimal production, planning, economic policy questions and financial portfolio selection. By emphasising the practical application of mathematical principles, this unit equips students with the necessary quantitative literacy to navigate complex problems in business, economics, and finance.
