Assignment 1

Due: Week 4, 5pm Friday
Weighting: 50%

What makes a national museum “national”?

Part a) In this exercise you will consider different ways of classifying the national museums, galleries and other cultural facilities. Consider the list of venues given below and from information you can glean from their web pages, draw up a table that answers as many of the following factual and interpretive questions as possible. You do not need to include copies of the physical web pages you gleamed this information from, but you must ensure that you reference ALL the links used appropriately in your referencing.

- Does this facility have a clear mission statement?
- Does this facility have a clear set of policies relating to its operation?
- Does this facility have a permanent collection? – If so briefly describe its size and nature.
- Who owns the collection?
- What is the nature and extent of the collection?
- Who owns the infrastructure? (buildings, grounds etc)
• Is the facility clearly aligned with any other organization?

• Does this facility have detailed information about individual collection items available on the web?

• Does this facility have its own education and public programs? If so describe their nature briefly.

• What sorts of stories are told through the exhibition work of this facility?

• What sort of audiences would be attracted to this facility?

• Are there examples of nationally significant items in this collection?

• Would you classify this as a national? Briefly explain your reasoning.

Here is a list of institutions to investigate. Please note you only need select 15 of these institutions for this part of the assignment:-

Australian National Aviation Museum

Australian National Maritime Museum

Australian National Botanic Gardens

National Museum of Australia

National Gallery of Australia

National Dinosaur Museum

Australian Tennis Museum
Part b) For the second part of this assignment you are asked to develop a list of criteria that define a national collecting institution. Please use some of the examples above to illustrate your argument in either a positive or negative sense. You should also read the associated literature listed below to support your argument. Please restrict your answer to 1500 ( +/- 10%) words and use references appropriately.

Both Parts a and b are equally weighted in this assessment item.

Literature for first assignment (note these items will be made available to you via iLearn).

Additional readings of value to this assignment may also be included on iLearn during semester. You are also welcome to read more widely than this listing in undertaking this assignment.

On successful completion you will be able to:
- experience in critical thinking regarding museological issues

The National Museum of Australia, exploring the themes of Australia's Land, Nation and People, was opened by Prime Minister John Howard on March 11, 2001. It has been a focus of controversy ever since its establishment and received some harsh criticism early on particularly from Windschuttle (2001). As a result, a review was undertaken in 2003 (known as the Carroll Report).

The Review Committee was asked to examine the aims and content of the Museum's exhibitions and public and schools programs, evaluate the Museum's progress so far and propose priorities for future development of exhibitions and programs.

The Committee called for public submissions and held meetings with academics, museum specialists, heads of related institutions and experts in a variety of relevant disciplines to discuss exhibitions and programs and to identify issues that should shape the Museum's future direction.

From the literature, review of the museum and submissions to the review, and a visit to the museum (if possible) you are asked to assess how successfully the National Museum of Australia fulfils its original purpose of representing an appropriate interpretation of the nation.

You should confine your answer to 2500 words (+/- 10%). Use the assigned readings to support your arguments and use references appropriately.

List of readings for assignment 2 (these are some suggested readings only. You may use some of these to supplement readings you have found during your research)
